

Santa Fe Irrigation District Water Ambassador Program

The Water Ambassador Program is a unique program developed by the Santa Fe Irrigation District (District), which consists of community volunteers to promote water and conservation awareness throughout the community.

Program volunteers donate valuable time and effort to educate the public about the importance of water and water conservation. Prior experience in the water industry is not a requirement; participants only need the desire to volunteer and the energy and ability to inform others about the issues.

PROGRAM OBJECTIVES

- ◆ Increase participant awareness, knowledge and understanding of water issues, including how to conserve water
- ◆ Expansion of the District's community involvement and outreach
- ◆ Enable residents to encourage water conservation in the community
- ◆ Serve as a representative of the District who can be a source of information regarding water related issues

PROGRAM OVERVIEW

Volunteers meet once a month to participate in educational classes, discuss current water issues and upcoming events. Community outreach and public education are the other key components to this program.

The focus of this water education program will include topics of particular interest here in the San Diego Region, including water conservation, dependence upon on the Sacramento Bay Delta and Colorado River, and the movement towards sustainable water resources.

If you, or someone you know, are considering your options as to how you can give back to your community, please consider this program. For more information, contact Jessica Parks at (858) 227-5799 or at jparks@sfidwater.org
